Reply,
There are several sites on the internet that appear to be great sites on GMAT. But not all of them are reliable. People often spend time and energy over these useless sites. A friend recommended <http://winningprep.com> to me sometime back. I have found it to be an immensely helpful site, guiding GMAT aspirants as to how to go about the exam. It is a step wise guide to students about how to approach the GMAT test and ensure fabulous scores.

there are a ton of free GMAT questions on the web. Not sure is they are a good representation of the actual exam, but it cant hurt.

Try this link,

I know that the two dominant players in GMAT test prep are

1) Princeton Review which claims to have about 1012 GMAT Questions.

2) Kaplan Advanced GMAT

The Princeton Review has brand new material. Has anyone gone through this?

The Kaplan Advanced GMAT seems to be the reworded title of Kaplan 800 GMAT (aka Kaplan 650 GMAT) - which Kaplan hasn't changed one single thing about since 2002. Has anyone tried this or am I wrong in this assessment.
