
Bar Exam Prep in Law School

Posted by et non - 2008/01/11 19:57

I just heard that some law schools are offering bar exam prep course to their 3rd yr students. My school doesnt offer it. I think it is be mandatory. Is there a way to share that info with others....like me?

=====

Re:Bar Exam Prep in Law School

Posted by Olivia 07 - 2008/01/14 23:12

GWLS offers a bar prep program as an elective. Everyone is taking it. If your school does not, then buy materials b4 graduation and do self study.

=====

Re:Bar Exam Prep in Law School

Posted by Micky B - 2008/02/02 03:46

you can buy used Barbri/PMBR books on craigslist or ebay. you can do self-study prior to graduation if your school doesnt offer a prep course prior to grad.

=====

Re:Bar Exam Prep in Law School

Posted by Sarah - 2008/02/15 00:51

there are only a few for sale on ebay. They look really warn out. are the obsolete if they are more than 3 years old?

=====

Re:Bar Exam Prep in Law School

Posted by LK311 - 2008/02/15 23:33

Usually when a law school offers bar prep, it is mostly for the State portion of the exam. You still need to study for the general portion through a bar exam prep course.

=====

Re:Bar Exam Prep in Law School

Posted by Olivia 07 - 2008/02/19 11:50

check craigslist.org. sometimes they have a few in local areas

=====

Re:Bar Exam Prep in Law School

Posted by LK311 - 2008/02/19 19:08

Unless you are only a internet shopper, you can buy used books at the school book store. There are a little more expansive than should be but usually in really good shape. Or you can go to a used book store that does not necessary have an attachment to a university, those places are usually very cheap.

=====